

Become a PCORI Peer Reviewer

PCORI is inviting interested patients, caregivers, clinicians, researchers, and other healthcare stakeholders to sign up to become peer reviewers.

Reports from research projects funded by the Patient-Centered Outcomes Research Institute (PCORI) require peer review to determine whether the evidence and analyses support the conclusions of the report. Our goal is to engage the broader healthcare community in a peer-review process that assesses research through the lens of scientific integrity and credibility, but also relevance and usefulness.

Apply here:

www.sciencesupport.org/PCORIpeer

If you answer brief questions about your health experience and provide some other background information, your name will be included in our list of potential reviewers. When a report is submitted that covers topics related to your identified health experiences, you may be contacted to review that report. All reviewers will receive a small honorarium to thank you for contributing to the effort to conduct research with findings that are relevant and useful to both the users and providers of health care.

For more information, contact us at peerreview@pcori.org